

Where Do Your House of Delegates Candidates Stand on Reproductive Rights?

Paul Nichols (D)

Paul Nichols supports a woman's right to choose and believes politicians should not interfere in personal, private decisions.

Nichols also supports commonsense policies that would prevent unintended pregnancies and reduce the need for abortion, such as:

- ◆ Increasing access to affordable birth control and emergency contraception; and
- ◆ Supporting medically accurate, age appropriate sex education in public schools.

Faisal Gill (R)

"I am also 100% pro-life, from conception to natural death, and one of the bills that I want to introduce is I want to make sure that the women of Virginia get to see a sonogram before they start to think about having an abortion. [applause] And that will be my first legislative priority." –Faisal Gill, upon accepting the Republican nomination

Restrictions on choice at the national level mean we must work that much harder to keep choice safe and accessible in Virginia.

The Virginia legislature has great power to restrict reproductive choice, and that's why this year, the bottom line is clear:

ELECTIONS MATTER.

Please vote Tuesday, November 6. Click here to find your polling place.